Samaritan's Purse Sends God's Love to Liberia!

A 100-ton consignment was airlifted to Liberia on Thursday, October 2, 2014 from the United States of America through the Roberts International Airport (RIA) as a demonstration of Samaritan's Purse humanitarian work in Liberia since 2003. The consignment includes personal protective equipment (PPEs), anti-malaria and anti-body drugs, chlorine, and buckets, among other items. Mr. Franklin Graham, head of Samaritan's Purse and son of Evangelist, Billy Graham, sent his private plane to the DC area to pick up the Ambassador and take him to the Samaritan's Purse send-off of the jet cargo plane. Ambassador Jeremiah C. Sulunteh told the press that "hope is on the way to Liberia." This air freight marks the initial entry point of the organization since they temporarily pulled out four months ago following the infection of several of its doctors with the Ebola virus disease while catering to patients.

Ambassador Sulunteh Goes to the White House for Global Health Agenda Summit

On September 25th, Ambassador Sulunteh took a break from his meetings at the UN General Assembly to attend a White House Global Health Event where he introduced Liberian doctor, Melvin Korkor, who was the Key Note Speaker. Dr. Korkor is the Liberian doctor who contracted and survived the Ebola Virus Disease in Liberia.

Dr. Korkor was the only survivor in his rural clinic. He told his story at the White House Summit on Global Health.

"When you are ill and dying and someone says help is on the way, you have hope."
